Page 2 — Why Solo in Japan (Read First)

Japan is one of the more comfortable countries to explore alone: reliable transit, clear signage on major lines, and a strong lost-and-found culture. Solo travel still means you are your own backup, so a little planning goes a long way.

Solo-friendly habits:

- Share your rough itinerary with someone back home.
- Keep one offline copy of bookings, maps, and key addresses.
- Build in slower days — solo travel is more tiring than it looks.
- Trust your instincts; it's fine to leave a place that feels off.

Solo realities to plan for:

- Some restaurants and ryokan favor pairs/groups — book ahead and confirm solo bookings.
- Carrying your own bags everywhere; pack light.
- No one to watch your stuff — be mindful in cafes and stations.

Pre-trip safety setup

- ☒ Travel insurance arranged (incl. medical & belongings)
- ☒ Embassy/consulate contact saved offline
- ☒ Emergency numbers for Japan written down (confirm current numbers)
- ☒ Trusted contact has my itinerary
- ☒ Copies of passport saved offline & with home contact
- ☒ Accommodation addresses saved in local script + romanized

Daily safety check-in

Date	Where I am	Next stop	"I'm OK" sent to	Time
------	------------	-----------	------------------	------

Personal safety notes (general):

- Keep valuables split between bag and on-body pouch.

- Note the last train time — missing it can mean a long wait or pricey taxi.
- Walk with intent; duck into a convenience store if you need to pause and check directions.
- Share live location with a trusted contact in unfamiliar areas.

Dining solo in Japan is easy and common — counter seating is everywhere.

Solo-friendly dining styles:

- Counter seats at ramen, sushi, and izakaya — made for one.
- Ticket-machine shops: buy a meal ticket, hand it over, no chatting needed.
- Convenience stores and depachika (food halls) for low-pressure meals.
- Standing noodle bars for a quick solo bite.
- Set meals (teishoku) for balanced single portions.

Tips for solo diners:

- Smaller places may be cash-only — carry some cash.
- Some izakaya have a small seating/table charge; confirm.
- A translation app helps with no-English menus; pointing is fine.
- Reservations help at popular spots; ask if they seat solo guests.
